On the edge of the past, present and future. The title is a reference to the German philosopher Wilhelm von Humboldt's claim that the Greeks lived on the threshold of history. Each director is linked to an area of the "universal" world, and some are more notable than others. My thanks to the Foundation for the Creation of a New Language for aiding in the translation of the Greek text of the Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen, drawn up in France in 1789, and to the online translators of the French Revolution for helping me find the words I needed. 1. The Universal Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen Article 1. The Declaration of the Rights of Man is an integral part of the system of rights established by the French Revolution. All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. They are endowed with reason and conscience and should act towards one another in a spirit of brotherhood. Article 2. The Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen shall establish the rights of man and of the citizen. The purpose of the Declaration of the Rights of Man and of the Citizen is to ensure that all men and women enjoy the same rights and freedoms, for all citizens of the Republic, wherever they may be. Article 3. No one shall be held in slavery or servitude; slavery and the slave trade are prohibited. No one shall be held in servitude for more than one year. Article 4. No one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment 82157476af
